

Broadband Over Power line will prove to be an unmitigated disaster. Electric companies, primarily public utilities, are rushing into an area of high-technology services that they know nothing about. It will turn out to have little demand by the public, be unreliable and troublesome to maintain. The cost of implementation, maintenance and, ultimately deinstallation will drive their profitability through the floor.

The bill for this boondoggle will be paid by the public utility electric power users, i.e., you and me.
